Business Experience

Nanette DeWester has been providing clients with a broad range of proven creative solutions to their communications training and development needs for over 20 years. Her background as an entertainer lends itself to the engaging and entertaining format that has become the hallmark of her work. Whether providing custom one-on-one intensive coaching sessions or leading a company-wide presentation skill-building workshop Nanette has the ability to motivate the learning process and facilitate lasting behavior change.

Her clients range from Fortune 500 senior executives to non-profit companies, such as NBC Universal, Barclays Capital, Sony Music, The Rockefeller Foundation, Google, Notre Dame University, Penguin Random House, and UNICEF.

Career Background

Nanette began training after a career as a professional actor performing on stage and television, and as an improviser with companies such as Second City. She worked with Mt. Sinai's Morchand Center teaching communication skills to physicians and medical students.

She's prepared many high-profile clients for national television and radio appearances such as: "The Today Show," "Good Morning America," and "The Daily Show." Her clients include Pulitzer Prize winning novelist Jhumpa Lahiri, real estate entrepreneur Barbara Corcoran, Curves CEO Gary Heavin, NYTimes columnist and Nobel Prize winning economist Paul Krugman, and bestselling author Sue Monk Kidd.

Testimonial

"Working with Nanette over the past 5 years has amplified our messaging at all levels! She is also a great thought partner and has helped us strategically diagnose areas for growth and improvement in creative and fun ways."
